General Microsystems Inc. acquire RockFish Tek, Inc.

General Microsystems Inc. (GMI) announced the acquisition of RockFish Tek, Inc., an infrastructure technology integration company based in Santa Clara, California. GMI has long been a cornerstone in the Pacific Northwest, providing information technology (IT) infrastructure products and services to clients such as Group Health Cooperative, Expeditors International, and Starbucks. This is one of a series of investments designed to strengthen customer value in response to changes in IT infrastructure technologies.

“Evolving customer needs combined with emerging technologies have IT infrastructures poised for the most dramatic changes since the advent of the PC” says Earl W. Overstreet II, President and CEO of the new combined company. “Consolidation, convergence, and virtualization coupled with public, private, and hybrid options give customers unprecedented choices to deliver IT solutions faster, more reliably, and at lower cost. The RockFish Tek acquisition accelerates our ability to help customers architect and implement the best solutions for their environments by expanding our technical and sales expertise and providing a more comprehensive product offering.”

RockFish Tek is recognized in the Bay Area as an infrastructure technology integration company, that designs and implements complete technology solutions for enterprise computing clients.

“I’m very excited about joining the GMI team. Earl Overstreet and GMI have a reputation that is second to none. GMI has steady growth plans and a vision for the future, and this partnership provides us with immediate scalability for our area of expertise throughout the region,” says Daniel Miller, VP Southwest Region.
